Contents / Aims and Objectives

Oral Presentations play an important role in the scientific community and in clinical practice. Whether your task is to present your scientific findings to an academic (or non-academic) audience, to present a case to supervisors or colleagues or to argue convincingly in a scientific discussion: the way in which you communicate your theses and ideas always makes a decisive difference. In this course, we will look at the different aspects which can turn a presentation into a success, and we will practice these aspects in detail.

Methods

Presentations with video recording, individual feedback, group feedback, practical exercises and discussion.
